Most important figure from the region, by Joel Fitzgibbon

THE member for Hunter, Joel Fitzgibbon, thanked those who had supported him in his budget speech on Thursday, May 26. 2006. He ended by thanking those who had supported his election campaign.

I will never give them cause to regret their support, he said.

Joel's supporters are toasting his success in opposing the Rudd Government. Last week's federal budget delivered $1.45 billion for the extension of the F3 freeway to Berowra, right through the heart of Joel's electorate.

This wins us on the back of an equally stunning win for the electorate last December when the Hunter was awarded $80 million for upgrading its coal railways. Is there an MP in Australia who can boast such success?

For Joel Fitzgibbon, however, there's more. Not just the member for Hunter, Joel is Minister for Defence. Joel is responsible for 50,000 active-duty personnel in the Australian Defence Force – the ADF – and for 10,000 reservists. Last week's budget charged Joel with the responsibility for protecting $21 billion on defence in the coming year.

Joel Fitzgibbon could well be the Hunter's most important person in any area of public life, even Australia's first prime minister Edmund Barton notionally represented the Hunter electorate, but in the first federal election, Herb "Doc" Evatt was raised as a child at East Maitland, and elected to the federal seat of Hunter late in his political career. "The Doc was a key minister in Curtin's wartime cabinet and then leader of the Labor Party in opposition in opposition and officiating presiding over the United Nations. But the Doc was never regarded as from the Hunter, and probably never claimed to be.

In contrast, Joel proudly represents the Hunter region beyond. No doubt, early on, senior ADF personnel would have looked at Joel as out of his depth, from a different social class, and perhaps never claimed to be.

But Joel has done it. He seems to have the respect of his colleagues and the country. Joel has made his mark as a member for Hunter, in the parliament and in the country. Joel has a future as a leader in the country.

RESPONSIBILITY. Edmund Barton, Joel Fitzgibbon and Doc Evatt. — Artwork by David Coleman.

Joel has done it. He seems to have the respect of his colleagues and the country. Joel has made his mark as a member for Hunter, in the parliament and in the country. Joel has a future as a leader in the country.

THE member for Hunter, Joel Fitzgibbon, thanked those who had supported him in his budget speech on Thursday, May 26. 2006. He ended by thanking those who had supported his election campaign.

I will never give them cause to regret their support, he said.

Joel's supporters are toasting his success in opposing the Rudd Government. Last week's federal budget delivered $1.45 billion for the extension of the F3 freeway to Berowra, right through the heart of Joel's electorate.

This wins us on the back of an equally stunning win for the electorate last December when the Hunter was awarded $80 million for upgrading its coal railways. Is there an MP in Australia who can boast such success?

For Joel Fitzgibbon, however, there's more. Not just the member for Hunter, Joel is Minister for Defence. Joel is responsible for 50,000 active-duty personnel in the Australian Defence Force – the ADF – and for 10,000 reservists. Last week's budget charged Joel with the responsibility for protecting $21 billion on defence in the coming year.

Joel Fitzgibbon could well be the Hunter's most important person in any area of public life, even Australia's first prime minister Edmund Barton notionally represented the Hunter electorate, but in the first federal election, Herb "Doc" Evatt was raised as a child at East Maitland, and elected to the federal seat of Hunter late in his political career. "The Doc was a key minister in Curtin's wartime cabinet and then leader of the Labor Party in opposition in opposition and officiating presiding over the United Nations. But the Doc was never regarded as from the Hunter, and probably never claimed to be.

In contrast, Joel proudly represents the Hunter region beyond. No doubt, early on, senior ADF personnel would have looked at Joel as out of his depth, from a different social class, and perhaps never claimed to be.

But Joel has done it. He seems to have the respect of his colleagues and the country. Joel has made his mark as a member for Hunter, in the parliament and in the country. Joel has a future as a leader in the country.

RESPONSIBILITY. Edmund Barton, Joel Fitzgibbon and Doc Evatt. — Artwork by David Coleman.

Joel has done it. He seems to have the respect of his colleagues and the country. Joel has made his mark as a member for Hunter, in the parliament and in the country. Joel has a future as a leader in the country.

THE member for Hunter, Joel Fitzgibbon, thanked those who had supported him in his budget speech on Thursday, May 26. 2006. He ended by thanking those who had supported his election campaign.

I will never give them cause to regret their support, he said.

Joel's supporters are toasting his success in opposing the Rudd Government. Last week's federal budget delivered $1.45 billion for the extension of the F3 freeway to Berowra, right through the heart of Joel's electorate.

This wins us on the back of an equally stunning win for the electorate last December when the Hunter was awarded $80 million for upgrading its coal railways. Is there an MP in Australia who can boast such success?

For Joel Fitzgibbon, however, there's more. Not just the member for Hunter, Joel is Minister for Defence. Joel is responsible for 50,000 active-duty personnel in the Australian Defence Force – the ADF – and for 10,000 reservists. Last week's budget charged Joel with the responsibility for protecting $21 billion on defence in the coming year.

Joel Fitzgibbon could well be the Hunter's most important person in any area of public life, even Australia's first prime minister Edmund Barton notionally represented the Hunter electorate, but in the first federal election, Herb "Doc" Evatt was raised as a child at East Maitland, and elected to the federal seat of Hunter late in his political career. "The Doc was a key minister in Curtin's wartime cabinet and then leader of the Labor Party in opposition in opposition and officiating presiding over the United Nations. But the Doc was never regarded as from the Hunter, and probably never claimed to be.

In contrast, Joel proudly represents the Hunter region beyond. No doubt, early on, senior ADF personnel would have looked at Joel as out of his depth, from a different social class, and perhaps never claimed to be.

But Joel has done it. He seems to have the respect of his colleagues and the country. Joel has made his mark as a member for Hunter, in the parliament and in the country. Joel has a future as a leader in the country.

RESPONSIBILITY. Edmund Barton, Joel Fitzgibbon and Doc Evatt. — Artwork by David Coleman.

Joel has done it. He seems to have the respect of his colleagues and the country. Joel has made his mark as a member for Hunter, in the parliament and in the country. Joel has a future as a leader in the country.

THE member for Hunter, Joel Fitzgibbon, thanked those who had supported him in his budget speech on Thursday, May 26. 2006. He ended by thanking those who had supported his election campaign.

I will never give them cause to regret their support, he said.

Joel's supporters are toasting his success in opposing the Rudd Government. Last week's federal budget delivered $1.45 billion for the extension of the F3 freeway to Berowra, right through the heart of Joel's electorate.

This wins us on the back of an equally stunning win for the electorate last December when the Hunter was awarded $80 million for upgrading its coal railways. Is there an MP in Australia who can boast such success?

For Joel Fitzgibbon, however, there's more. Not just the member for Hunter, Joel is Minister for Defence. Joel is responsible for 50,000 active-duty personnel in the Australian Defence Force – the ADF – and for 10,000 reservists. Last week's budget charged Joel with the responsibility for protecting $21 billion on defence in the coming year.

Joel Fitzgibbon could well be the Hunter's most important person in any area of public life, even Australia's first prime minister Edmund Barton notionally represented the Hunter electorate, but in the first federal election, Herb "Doc" Evatt was raised as a child at East Maitland, and elected to the federal seat of Hunter late in his political career. "The Doc was a key minister in Curtin's wartime cabinet and then leader of the Labor Party in opposition in opposition and officiating presiding over the United Nations. But the Doc was never regarded as from the Hunter, and probably never claimed to be.

In contrast, Joel proudly represents the Hunter region beyond. No doubt, early on, senior ADF personnel would have looked at Joel as out of his depth, from a different social class, and perhaps never claimed to be.

But Joel has done it. He seems to have the respect of his colleagues and the country. Joel has made his mark as a member for Hunter, in the parliament and in the country. Joel has a future as a leader in the country.

RESPONSIBILITY. Edmund Barton, Joel Fitzgibbon and Doc Evatt. — Artwork by David Coleman.

Joel has done it. He seems to have the respect of his colleagues and the country. Joel has made his mark as a member for Hunter, in the parliament and in the country. Joel has a future as a leader in the country.

THE member for Hunter, Joel Fitzgibbon, thanked those who had supported him in his budget speech on Thursday, May 26. 2006. He ended by thanking those who had supported his election campaign.

I will never give them cause to regret their support, he said.

Joel's supporters are toasting his success in opposing the Rudd Government. Last week's federal budget delivered $1.45 billion for the extension of the F3 freeway to Berowra, right through the heart of Joel's electorate.

This wins us on the back of an equally stunning win for the electorate last December when the Hunter was awarded $80 million for upgrading its coal railways. Is there an MP in Australia who can boast such success?

For Joel Fitzgibbon, however, there's more. Not just the member for Hunter, Joel is Minister for Defence. Joel is responsible for 50,000 active-duty personnel in the Australian Defence Force – the ADF – and for 10,000 reservists. Last week's budget charged Joel with the responsibility for protecting $21 billion on defence in the coming year.

Joel Fitzgibbon could well be the Hunter's most important person in any area of public life, even Australia's first prime minister Edmund Barton notionally represented the Hunter electorate, but in the first federal election, Herb "Doc" Evatt was raised as a child at East Maitland, and elected to the federal seat of Hunter late in his political career. "The Doc was a key minister in Curtin's wartime cabinet and then leader of the Labor Party in opposition in opposition and officiating presiding over the United Nations. But the Doc was never regarded as from the Hunter, and probably never claimed to be.

In contrast, Joel proudly represents the Hunter region beyond. No doubt, early on, senior ADF personnel would have looked at Joel as out of his depth, from a different social class, and perhaps never claimed to be.

But Joel has done it. He seems to have the respect of his colleagues and the country. Joel has made his mark as a member for Hunter, in the parliament and in the country. Joel has a future as a leader in the country.